

Humanitarian Assistance in Somalia

Humanitarian assistance in Somalia is provided through cooperation between the Federal Government of Somalia, Federal Member States, United Nations agencies, international and national non-governmental organizations, the Somali Red Crescent Society, community organizations, women-led organizations, religious institutions, and local protection networks.

Humanitarian programmes may provide food, emergency cash, clean water, sanitation, temporary shelter, healthcare, vaccination, nutrition treatment, education, legal assistance, family tracing, psychosocial support, protection from violence, and services for refugees, returnees, and internally displaced people.

The availability of assistance depends on the security situation, available funding, the location of affected communities, eligibility requirements, and whether an organization or its local partners are operating in the area.

The contact details provided in this document are fictional test contacts created for demonstration purposes. They must not be used to request real assistance.

United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs

The United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, commonly known as OCHA, coordinates humanitarian planning, information sharing, and emergency response in Somalia.

OCHA collects information about humanitarian needs, displacement, funding, humanitarian access, emergencies, and the activities of humanitarian organizations. It supports cooperation between Somali authorities, United Nations agencies, NGOs, donors, and local organizations.

OCHA publishes humanitarian situation reports, emergency updates, response plans, funding information, and information about access to affected communities.

Assistance for Gender-Based Violence

A person affected by rape, sexual violence, forced marriage, domestic violence, sexual exploitation, trafficking, or another form of abuse may require medical, psychosocial, legal, and protection assistance.

Possible sources of support include health facilities, gender-based violence one-stop centres, women-led organizations, UNHCR protection partners, community protection workers, legal-aid organizations, and trusted local authorities.

Medical care should be sought as soon as possible after sexual violence. Survivors should be treated with dignity, confidentiality, and respect. They should not be blamed, pressured to disclose information, or forced to report an incident against their wishes.

Assistance for Children

Children affected by conflict may require medical care, nutrition support, education, family tracing, psychosocial assistance, and protection from recruitment, abduction, sexual violence, forced marriage, and exploitation.

A child separated from a parent or caregiver should be referred to a recognized child-protection organization or family-tracing service. The child's name, photograph, location, and personal information should not be shared publicly, especially in cases involving armed groups, trafficking, or sexual violence.

Assistance for Displaced People

Internally displaced people may require emergency shelter, food, clean water, sanitation, healthcare, legal documentation, education, protection from eviction, and livelihood support.

Displaced families should seek information from recognized humanitarian organizations, displacement-site representatives, government authorities, or local protection organizations.

People should be cautious of individuals who demand money, political support, military recruitment, or sexual favours in exchange for humanitarian assistance. Legitimate humanitarian assistance should not require illegal payments or sexual exploitation.

Emergency Safety

People facing immediate danger should move to a safer location if it is possible to do so safely. They should contact trusted local leaders, health facilities, police services, humanitarian organizations, or community protection structures.

People should avoid suspicious objects, active fighting areas, military installations, abandoned ammunition, unfamiliar checkpoints, and areas recently affected by armed attacks. Suspicious objects should never be touched, moved, or approached.
