

Humanitarian Assistance in the DRC

Humanitarian assistance in the Democratic Republic of the Congo is provided through the Congolese government, provincial authorities, United Nations agencies, international NGOs, national NGOs, the Red Cross of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, faith-based organizations, women-led organizations, community groups, and local volunteer networks.

Assistance may include food, emergency cash, clean water, sanitation, shelter, healthcare, vaccination, nutrition treatment, education, protection from violence, legal services, family tracing, psychosocial assistance, and support for refugees, returnees, and internally displaced people.

The availability of assistance depends on security conditions, funding, location, road access, registration requirements, eligibility criteria, and whether organizations are operating in a particular area.

The contact details below are fictional test contacts created for demonstration and RAG testing. They must not be used to request real assistance.

United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs

The United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, known as OCHA, coordinates humanitarian planning, emergency information, funding updates, displacement reporting, and humanitarian access in the DRC.

OCHA supports cooperation between the Congolese authorities, provincial governments, United Nations agencies, NGOs, donors, and local organizations.

Assistance for Gender-Based Violence

A person affected by rape, sexual violence, forced marriage, domestic violence, sexual exploitation, trafficking, or another form of abuse may require medical, psychosocial, legal, and protection assistance.

Possible sources of support include health facilities, women-led organizations, GBV service centres, humanitarian protection partners, community protection workers, legal-aid organizations, and trusted local authorities.

Medical care should be sought as soon as possible after sexual violence. Survivors should be treated with dignity and confidentiality. They should not be blamed, pressured to disclose information, or forced to report an incident against their wishes.

Assistance for Children

Children affected by conflict may require medical care, nutrition support, education, family tracing, psychosocial assistance, and protection from recruitment, abduction, sexual violence, forced marriage, trafficking, and exploitation.

A child separated from a parent or caregiver should be referred to a recognized child-protection or family-tracing organization. The child's name, photograph, location, and personal information should not be shared publicly.

Assistance for Displaced People

Displaced people may require shelter, food, clean water, sanitation, healthcare, legal documentation, education, protection from eviction, and support to restore livelihoods.

Displaced families should seek information from recognized humanitarian organizations, displacement-site representatives, government authorities, or local protection organizations.

People should be cautious of individuals demanding money, political support, military recruitment, or sexual favours in exchange for humanitarian assistance.

Emergency Safety

People facing immediate danger should move to a safer location if it is possible to do so safely. They should contact trusted local leaders, health facilities, humanitarian organizations, police services, or community protection structures.

People should avoid suspicious objects, active fighting areas, military installations, abandoned ammunition, unfamiliar checkpoints, and locations recently affected by armed attacks.

Suspicious objects, weapons, ammunition, and unexploded devices should never be touched, moved, or approached.
